Uniform Gift to Minors Act

Credit Unions in New York State are allowed under the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act to act as depositories for gifts by adults to children of shares, deposits or securities. Under this Act, only one minor may be named and only one person may be the custodian.

The advantage of this type of gift is that interest earned on such deposits would be taxable to an adult, but to a child with no income this earned interest would be either tax-free or taxed lower, depending on the amount of earned interest.

The Act also provides a considerable amount of flexibility permitting the custodial property to be used for the benefit of the minor anytime the custodian deems suitable and proper.

As far as responsibility to these accounts, Section 6 of the 1965 Act provides that no "issuer ...or other person" dealing with the custodian is responsible for determining:

1. Whether transfers to or by the custodian is authorized by the Act.
- OR
2. Whether money delivered to the custodian is properly applied for the benefit of the minor.

Although the method of making a gift is simple, the effect of the gift is absolutely binding and the custodian (whether parent or third party) undertakes a number of substantial obligations, including the following:

1. Maintenance of records of "all transactions with respect to the custodial property" (passbooks or share account records should suffice).
2. Prudent reinvestment of custodial property (except that this obligation does not apply to the original shares or other property, although it would apparently apply to income there on).
3. Discretionary payments to the minor as the custodian "deems suitable and proper."
4. Possible nondiscretionary payment or accounting to the minor pursuant to the court order.
5. Non-discretionary payment to the minor at age 18.

Moreover, there is no legal way in which a parent or donor can retrieve the property for his/her own use.

From a tax point of view, up to $10,000.00 may be deposited into a Custodial Account without requiring a gift tax return.

In order to open a custodial account (UGTMA) at this credit union, the adult should complete and sign a signature card and (optional) a Designation of Successor Custodian Agreement.
